PERSONAL AND SOCIETY.

Last night closed a week that has been festive not only politically, but socially. There are some who anticipate a dull season as soon as the new year comes, because so many are entertaining now, but there is, and always will be, some one left to give a reception or tes, as that seems to be the only hospitality many can offer to their friends. The rage for beautiful china continues, and many inncheons are given where there will be an opportunity for using it. The various courses are each served on sets espe-cially designed for the particular course for which they are to be used. One lady, for a handsomely appointed dinner had only plain white, but as it was Haviland's finest it was even more expensive than much of that which is decorated. One unique tea-service was recently brought to this city. It consists of not only the plates, cups, saucers, and tea-service proper, but the knife and fork handles are of the same china, and the tea-table is inlaid in China tiles. The whole is Hungarian ware, and was purchased at the Glasgow, Scot-

An evening's amusement, which is said to have its origin in the East, is known as "progressive harlequin." The arrangements are the same as for progressive euchre. A different game is played at each table, and the one winning the most is given the prize. Of course, to take part in harlequin one must know the several games—euchre, whist, poker, hearts, Napoleon, cribbage, authors, dominoes, or whatever is played. The entire four sested at one table move to the next, though only the gainers count. When not so many games are wanted as the guests fill tables, three or more games are imited to one room, and in order that the guests see only those that are in one room. Those who play euchre in one room can go to room number two for whist and to three for another. It is said to be a favorite entertainment where it has been given, and affords an immense deal of amusement. A host would have to be more particular about inviting those who could play all the games, than in progressive enchre, for everybody is supposed to be able to intelligently comprehend the mysteries of that game. Now that entertainers have been sighing for something new let them try that

The ladies of the Flower Mission will give their annual fair at Tomlinson Hall, the week beginning Nov. 20. The name chosen for this year is "Old Rymes in New Places." The general class of articles for sale will be much the same as in other years, and mottoes appropriate to the contents of the booths have been chosen. A committee has been at work for some time deciding the color and style of decoration, as well as colors of the costumes worn, in order that the general effect shall be harmonious. In former years each head of a booth chose her cwn, and some of the colors side-by side were discordant, and consequently ruined the tone of both. The amusements are in capable hands, and the evening and Saturday afternoon entertainments will equal, if not surpass, any that have ever been given, even when under the direction of a professional expert. Nearly everyone of known capable talent has been secured for some part, and the variety of entertainments will make it difficult to decide which will be the best. The preparations for the fair have been under consideration for some time, but the real work has been accomplished in the past few weeks. The patronage for this well-known and deserved charity has always been liberal, and the ladies hope this year for the same kindly interest and help from the public. deciding the color and style of decoration, as Personal Mention.

BARRISON'S RIGHT EAR. Wharton Barker Declares that He Will

Whisper in It by Right. Some Philadelphians expect that Senator Quay will have a rival at the President's ear when the federal patronage of this State is to be ladled out. The gentleman whom these people have in their mind is Mr. Wharton Barker, who claims to be the original Harrison man.

A good many friends of Mr. Barker expect that that gentleman will be offered a position in the President's Cabinet in return for the active support which he gave Mr. Harrison from the

In an interview, yesterday, Mr. Barker said: "General Harrison was nominated at Chicago very largely through the efforts of the leaders of the Irish Nationalists, who declared there that he would receive the votes of that class of that he would receive the votes of that class of American citizens. These gentlemen called upon ex-Senator Platt, of New York, and impressed him with the necessity of getting this vote in New York, and they declared that Gen. Harrison was certain to receive these votes. This interview, at which Dr. William Carroll, Michael Breslin and John Devoy were present, was the result of my efforts, and this interview, in my opinion, obtained for General Harrison the fifty five votes of New York which nominated him. The result in New York shows the wisdom of this nomination. It is a well-known fact that of the 106,000 votes in New York city cast for Harrison 45,000 came from the Irish-Americans—an increase of the Irish-American vote given to Blaine of 15,000. These people also turned over in the interior cities and in Brooklyn 25,000 votes—a total of 70,000 votes.

"The Irish vote in Pennsylvania for Harrison was very large. It was also very large in West Virginia. And inasmuch as Colonel Quay and the Republican national committee refused to co-operate with the Irish Nationalist leaders. their steadfast support was a great surprise.

their steadfast support was a great surprise.

'Now, as to Pennsylvania's recognition think that as the presidency has been won largely upon the support given by this State on the issue of protection it can hardly be doubted but that the State will have a great deal of influence in the administration of President Harrison. What recognition he will give to Pennsylvania will rest entirely with himself. The country now knows what I have long known—that Mr. Harrison is a man who decides all questions for himself. No political or personal consideration will induce him to depart from the course which he has lad down for himself. This I say because I know him to be of the type of Lin-

"Will not Senator Quay have practically the control of the federal patronage of this State?"

To this question Mr. Barker answered with great emphasis: "While satisfied that General Harrison will neither create nor foster political differences in Pennsylvania, I am satisfied that he will deal fairly with Quay, Cameron, Mc-Manes, Disston and Mages, of Pittsburg. He will do so because he is a Republican, believing in the Republican party, and will not tolerate any unnecessary strife. Senator Quay will not have the dictation of the federal patronage of this State by any means.

The "Baby Stare."

Apropos of the debutantes, society women have adopted a new-what shall we call it? Art is rather "chestnutty," but as this new something is purely a work of art, we will call it so, though its usual cognomen is "the baby stare." It looks very easy, but it requires arduous study, and many rehearsals, before one can do it effectively. You must first select your young man, and he must be young; a rounder of several seasons will not do at all; and, after you have him safely corrailed, and have gone over the usual preliminaries, and there comes a panse, look shyly down in your lap while you twist a convenient ribbon or toy with your fan; ask in a hesitating sort of way, as if you doubted its propriety, the most idiotic question you can think of, then lift your head slowly and look him straight in the eyes; be sure that your face is as utterly devoid of expression as the inside of an oyster shell. Don't wink. You will spoil it all if you wink. If you do it well your young man will say to himself, "What an innocent creature she is!" and with due appreciation of his own superior knowledge he will proceed to enlighten you, and you must be very careful to let the intelligence creep back slowly to your face; let him feel that he is imparting instruction, and is doing it well. It's awfully fetching.

Mrs. Annie Besant, the Socialist. London Correspondence of Albany Express.

Mrs. Besant's desk was hemmed in by compositors' cases on four sides, and while the typos passed this way and that with galleys of matter I atudied an interesting face. It might have been a beautiful face with its large eyes, sweet mouth, and dark, wavy hair, if it had not been a sad face, a face that nad loss stamped on its every line. Watching the tall, slender figure in its softly-falling gown of dull gold, cut in quaint, sethetic fashion, my mind went back to the tales I had heard of the girl who had married a clergyman and found herself out of harmony with the church and out of her husband's favor; of the divorce suit, where nothing could be established against a blameless life; of the children taken from their mother, and of the busy years writing, lecturing, disputing with Frances Power Cobbe on atheism, editing socialistic papers and pamphlets since i

After a careful canvass of New York our buyer writes us that he found many of the large Cloak Houses overstocked and anxious to sell, making large concessions in price to close large lots, and that he has purchased largely in fine garments, Ladies' and Children's Cloaks, and that we shall offer our customers Cloaks for much less money, retail, than we could have bought the same qualities at wholesale one month ago.

had heard her called a dangerous woman, a mischievous element in society, alien alike to state and creed. I had heard her children's governess call her, with enthusiasm, the loveliest lady in England. It seemed to me that if I looked long at her face I was more likely to agree with the last opinion than the first. Mrs. Besant is an indefatigable worker. I saw her billed for three lectures in Manchester, to be delivered morning, afternoon and evening, on the Sunday after my talk with her in London. Much of her work is done jointly with Mr. Bradlaugh, the two forming a publishing company, which sends out a good deal of radical literature. The connection with Bradlaugh does her no good in conservative eyes, but East London asks no questions about her creed; it idolizes her for the clear voice she has lifted in its be-
